

It wasn't long after I became a research scientist that I learned that scientists aren't the unbiased, impartial seekers of truth I always thought they were. Scientists have their own agendas, philosophies, pre-conceived notions, and pet theories. These views end up influencing their science. Nowhere does this have a greater impact on science than in global warming theory

Introduction

Global Warming is big business. Cottage industries are springing up overnight in response to the clamorings for alternative energy and sustainability. Fortunes are being made by hucksters selling their potions to the environmental hypochondriacs. Governments are salivating in anticipation of the new taxes that can be levied on the unsuspecting citizens. Bureaucrats dream of endless new possibilities to expand their do-nothing empires.

Billions of dollars are made available from governments around the world led by the United States and Great Britain, to people who prefer not work for a living or be productive. Instead, a special breed of intellectuals with agendas are kept busy at the public trough of grant money made available to prove man is the sole cause of global warming.

Ever hear of global warming grant money being made available to find out if nature is the cause of global warming? Not likely!

The national news media of TV networks, newspapers and magazines are the webmasters of the fear-ware needed to supplement their journal of international warfare, hunger, disease and natural disasters. When there isn't enough news, or the news isn't going in the direction envisioned by the owners, news is literally manufactured out of thin air by taking polls, using skewed questions bound to elicit the answers sought, and presenting the polling data as 'news'.

The local news broadcasts are no better. They have changed from a source of informative nearby happenings and civic events into a body bag report and summary of human misery. If you're looking for local news the only thing you will get is a litany of people bashing, traffic mishaps, burglaries, rapes, murders, and other assorted mayhem.

These 'news' people who use to report 'current events' are now in business to do whatever it takes to jack-up ratings, to get more ad revenue, to influence political outcomes, and just 'try to make the world a better place'. Though my personal experience with 'news people' is limited, my take on them is that they are barroom brawlers; if they can't find news, they create it. Who else but an 'action news reporter' can stick a microphone into the face of a mother who just lost nine children in a tenement fire and ask "what are your feelings right now?"

The United Nations loves it for the platform it gives them to further their One-World Order agenda. The UN now even has their own scientific cabal to manufacture the evidence it needs to support their agenda. The purpose of the UN is to aid in whatever ways necessary to level the playing field for less fortunate countries and, most importantly, an opportunity to beat up on the evil, capitalist, environmentally antagonistic, energy wasteful, United States.

Corporations endorse it because of the new products that will be made necessary not by needs of the marketplace, but by legislation. New jobs will be manufactured at the expense of the taxpayer who doesn't want the new and improved energy saving, non-polluting, whatever-it-is. Old products that were performing just fine will be accused, probably wrongly, of having done harm to the environment. New products will be required to replace the old, whether needed or not.

This hideous symbiosis between the news media, politicians, corporations, researchers, and assorted uninformed or misguided individuals is a corrupt, money-grabbing, power-hungry scheme with only one aim – control of your assets, control of your freedom, control of your life. All this to put a stop to something that cannot possibly have any noticeable effect on the planet – manmade global warming.
