

Jemma Green
Perth Acting Mayor

Jemma Green grew up in Perth's eastern hills on a stud farm in Woorloo where her father trained and bred racehorses.

She attended Eastern Hills Senior High School and studied a Bachelor of Commerce at Murdoch University before moving to London to work as an investment banker.

There, she studied part time, completing two postgraduate diplomas and a Masters in Sustainability at Cambridge University before moving back to Perth and meeting her husband Andrew Morton. The couple now have a 22-month-old daughter, Amélie.

In 2013, she started a consultancy firm called The Green Enterprise that provides strategic advice around commercial sustainability trends.

She is now Chair of Power Ledger, a Perth-based energy trading startup, and a Research Fellow at Curtin University, where her focus is on sustainable cities and renewable energy. She completed her PhD at the university earlier this year.
