

Satellite Session | Climate Change and Health Priorities for Vulnerable Populations

Thursday, March 15, 2018 | 1pm – 5pm | New York Hilton Hotel-Midtown | Rm: Nassau

1.00pm		Madeleine Thomson	Welcoming Remarks	International Research Institute for Climate and Society, Columbia University
1.10pm	Panel 1 Impacts of hydro-meteorological disasters on the health and well-being of children
	Chair	Wilmot James		Pediatrics, Columbia University Medical Center
		Lawrence Stanberry	The needs in children following the 2017 hurricane season – US Mainland	Pediatrics, Columbia University Medical Center
		Arnab Ghosh	The needs in children following the 2017 hurricane season – Puerto Rico	Cornell University
		Philip Larussa	The needs of children following typhoons – case studies from the developing world	Pediatrics, Columbia University Medical Center
		Perry Sheffield	The needs of children during heat waves	Environmental Medicine & Public Health, Mount Sinai
2.15pm	Panel 2 Forecasting climate sensitive health outcomes
	Chair	Juli Trtanj		Climate Program Office, National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration
		Angel Munoz	Forecasting Aedes -borne diseases	International Research Institute for Climate and Society, Columbia University
		Jeff Shaman	Using weather to improve infectious disease forecasts	Mailman School of Public Health, Columbia University
		Hannah Nissan	Building climate services for extreme heat	International Research Institute for Climate and Society, Columbia University
		Justin Cohen	Climate information needs for malaria elimination in Southern Africa	Clinton Health Access Initiative

3.20pm	Break
3.40pm	Panel 3 Emerging opportunities in climate and health
	Chair	Madeleine Thomson	International Research Institute for Climate and Society, Columbia University
		Jonathan Patz	Health co-benefits of greenhouse gas mitigation policies Global Health, University of Wisconsin- Madison
		Agnes Soucat	Do health systems pass the climate test? Health Systems, Financing and Governance, WHO
		James Hospedales	Building resilient regional health systems Caribbean Public Health Agency
		Ed Maibach	Health professionals as global communicators George Mason University
4.45pm		John Balbus	Closing Remarks National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences