Today's Readings

Deuteronomy 18:15-20;
Psalm 95:1-2, 6-7, 7-9; 1 Corinthians
7:32-35; Mark 1:21-28

Lectura, as de Hoy

Deuteronomio 18:15-20;
Salmo 95:1-2, 6-7, 7-9; 1 Corintios
7:32-35;
Marcos 1:21-28

In the Gospel of today, Jesus is contrasted with the other Rabbis. Most striking is that unlike the others, he teaches with authority. With His authority, 'He commands even the unclean spirits and they obey Him.' The word "authority" comes from the Latin "auctorial", which has its root word "auctor". This is equivalent to the English, "author" or "creator". Jesus, as God, the author of life, understands human nature. He is sure of Himself. He acts and speaks with confidence. We are certainly not the author of life, yet as followers of Christ, we are called upon to master the world around us, to use our faith and knowledge of divine truths to speak out and confront the world with authority. At Baptism, we were anointed to be priests, kings and prophets. A prophet is one who speaks for, or on behalf of God; one who speaks with authority. Accordingly, we form part of those prophets that Moses is talking about in the first reading of today.

Brothers and Sisters,

RE: LETTER OF APPRECIATION

The peace of the Lord be with you.

I wish to write to thank you immensely for the support I received from your communities through Fr Basil. I am very grateful for the 2000USD (Two Thousand Dollars) which you sent to me through Fr Basil Sede your Pastor to assist me in my Pastoral initiatives. Equally, the material gifts: clothes, shoes, etc which you contributed for the needy. These have been given to prisoners, orphans, and other people in need. Fr Basil will give you a report on these as he personally visited some of these places.

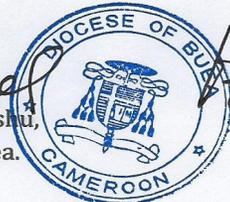

May the Good Lord continue to reward you all for your generosity.

Thank you.

God bless you.

Your obedient servant in Christ,

+ Immanuel Bushu
