

ALASKA BEARS 2018

C H R I S M C L E N N A N P H O T O E X P E D I T I O N S

Photographing the Alaskan grizzly bear is definitely a life-changing experience. The summer months for this species are all about food, with the grizzly bear's omnivorous diet allowing them to snack not only on salmon, but also on clams dug up along the coastline, sedge grass, berries and less frequently on carrion found by the bears.

With males often weighing over 600 kgs and standing at a height of up to 3 metres on their hind legs, they are certainly an impressive sight to see... And having the opportunity to literally walk amongst them as we spend time in the incredible surroundings of Lake Clark National Park, is an experience not to be compared with any other.

"I couldn't pass the opportunity to work with one of the greatest outdoor photographers of our time. And ironically, despite his incredible success and talent, Chris is not only one of the most humble men, but willingly shares his knowledge so that I could grasp his passion. When others were being lectured by their photo guides, Chris asked us what we learned today, praised our successes and suggested how to make our not so successful shots better. When opportunities arose, Chris put us first, always. Only when we felt comfortable with the shot did he take some of his own". Andy, USA.
