Emerging markets

Throughout his career, Dimitri has engaged with emerging market countries around the world in various capacities.

For more than a decade after the fall of the wall, Dimitri worked as an IMF economist or mission chief on a number of Eastern European countries, dealing with issues of economic transition and building market economy institutions. During the 1990s, he also worked on Greece and Cyprus.

He has led Financial Sector Assessment Program (FSAP) missions to Russia, Brazil, the Philippines, and Saudi Arabia, and IMF technical assistance missions on financial stability, financial supervision, and stress testing in Hungary, Israel, Lithuania, India, and South Africa.

In 2003, during his stint at the Greek Presidency of the EU, he was responsible for EU relations with Russia, the Caucasus, and Southeastern European countries, and developed jointly with the European Commission the EU's "Wider Europe" policy, a framework for EU relations with its eastern and southern neighbors.
