RELEASE FROM RESPONSIBILITY WHEN PATIENT REFUSES SERVICE This is to certify that I, _______, am refusing the service(s) of the Emergency Response Service and its staff and absolve the Service, its staff, and the consulting health care facility (if applicable) of any and all responsibility from any ill effects or adverse outcomes which may result from this action. Signed ________ Witness _______ Relationship (if patient is a minor or under Order of Supervision) ________ Figure 3-2 Example of a patient refusal form. Copyright © 2019 Pearson Canada Inc. 3 - 11

Prior to Leaving a Scene After a Patient Refusal, You Should:

- · Try again to persuade the patient
- Ensure the patient is able to make an informed decision
- · Have the patient sign the refusal
- Encourage the patient to seek help if symptoms persist
- Advise the patient to call EMS again if he/she changes their mind

Legal Aspects of Emergency Care

- Common Assault Obtain consent before touching a patient's clothing or body
- Abandonment Once care is started, you must continue until equally trained or higher-trained personnel take over
- Negligence Your care must adhere to a standard of care

Confidentiality

By law, you are allowed to release information without a patient's, parent's, or guardian's consent only if:

- Another health care provider needs it
- You are required by legal subpoena to provide it in court

Preservation of Evidence (1 of 2)

- · Observe and document anything unusual at the scene
- Touch only what you need to
- Never wipe away blood
- Move only what you need to move to protect the patient and provide emergency care
- Don't use the phone, unless police give you permission
