All scripture is inspired by God and is useful for teaching, for reproof, for correction, and for training in righteousness. - 2 Timothy 3:16 (NRSV)

Nearly 20 years ago, I set upon the task of reading the Bible from beginning to end. I'm pleased to say that I did it; I'm not pleased to say that it usually felt like a chore and that often I was distracted or zoned out when reading it. My desire to know scripture more deeply had backfired as I found myself wishing I could read some previous passages that had spoken to me rather than the three chapters I had assigned myself for the day.

Ultimately, I learned an important lesson. God's word does not have to be approached in any order or systematic fashion. Rather, scriptures come to our minds in all sorts of unique ways and times. For everything there is a season, and I've grown to feel that way about Bible passages: some verses that speak to me now may not speak to me the same way much later in life. In turn, others may mean little to me until suddenly they profoundly impact my current situation.

God is revealed to us every day. We need not impose an order to those revelations. Through prayer, devotions, and other forms of worship, we each walk a Christian path that may not follow a direct line from Genesis to Revelation.
