Repair vs Restoration

Masonry upkeep can involve both repair or restoration. Because masonry is prone to cracking and chipping, repairs become necessary over time. When restoring masonry buildings, we take the time to ensure the new pieces are period-appropriate. For example, a Victorian-era building would require Victorian style bricks. Masonry restoration is more involved than repairs, takes longer, and is costlier, but results in a beautiful effect. No matter the project, it's important to make sure that these special structures are cared for appropriately.
