VIDEO LESSON POLICY

MARCH 14, 2020

We are offering video lessons using Zoom, FaceTime, Google Duo, or Skype starting next week. We are trying out different formats and will be posting additional instructional materials on the website. Video lessons will be by appointment and not necessarily at your regular time.

Video lessons are optional. Students have signed up for lessons in person and do not have to try out video lessons. For those students who would like to participate, they can arrange appointment with either their regular teacher or the director on a space available basis. Students who choose the video option will only pay for one lesson per week but will not be limited to just one video lesson per week. We want to make this option as attractive as possible. You can have one free video lesson to determine if you like it and we think it is effective. Both teacher and parent need to agree that it is effective to continue past the free demonstration lesson. We recommend that you test your video connection with your teacher well before your first video lesson.

We are working on posting enhanced instructional materials online using Facebook and YouTube as well as other applications.

If you have questions, please contact director Donald Becker.
Texting and email is best but if you have to, you can call as well.
