

A Vision Therapy Success Story

If you spend any time with my son, Jason, you would not believe how much he was struggling in school. He is a bright, outgoing, happy kid, often laughing, talking, or singing his way through his day. However, all through middle school and for the first two years of high school, he struggled in school. It got so bad, he was academically ineligible to play baseball his sophomore year. His teachers would post conflicting comments on his report cards. Typical comments were "A pleasure to have in class" but "works below apparent ability". I was at my wits' end trying to pinpoint the problem. No amount of encouragement, nagging, bargaining, or arguing would work. We would think he had all his schoolwork under control only to get a phone call or email from his teacher. We tested him for ADD. He worked with a private tutor. We thought maybe there were too many distractions at home so we rearranged his room so he could study in peace. When that didn't work, he went to study at the tutor's office. His tutor kept saying, "We're missing something here". And then I happened to see a Facebook posting by Family Vision Care. It was short infographic titled "Is Your Child Smart in Everything but School?" I felt like it was written for us. When I brought it up to Dr. Hong, she said "Let's rule it out". What a surprise to find out he was having trouble with his vision.

Long story short, Jason started Vision Therapy six months ago and now he is pulling all A's and B's in school. This is the kid he is supposed to be. No longer struggling in school, he is able to concentrate and focus clearly now. He doesn't get tired reading anymore. To me it is an amazing transformation with amazing results. I only wish we had caught it earlier. A big thank you goes out to Dr. Hong, Family Vision Care, and Anita, his vision therapist.
